

AMLA announces the 2007 National Media Education Conference & First-Ever Research Summit

iPods, Blogs, and Beyond:

Evolving Media
Literacy for the 21st Century

St. Louis, June 23-26, 2007

Join hundreds of K-12 educators, college faculty, health specialists, media professionals, religious educators, and youth advocates to share ideas and successful practices in the burgeoning field of Media Literacy Education. Learn about resources for developing media literacy as an essential skill for the 21st century.

Features

Groundbreaking Research Summit

(Saturday 8am thru Sunday 6pm)

Concurrently with the National Conference, the AMLA will host a first-ever 2-day gathering of US and international researchers presenting findings on the efficacy of media literacy education and planning a research agenda for the future. If research is your interest, be there! Joint events and special rates allow you to attend both the Summit (Sat/Sun) and NMEC (Mon/Tues)

Video Camp for High School Students and Teachers

(Sat noon thru Tuesday noon)

Modern Media Makers (M3) is an intensive 3-day tutorial in media literacy and video production where teachers and students can learn together under the guidance of experienced media educators. (See videos from 2005 at www.AMLAinfo.org)

4-Day National Media Education Conference (NMEC)

(Sat. 6pm thru Tuesday 2pm)

Inspiring keynotes, practical workshops, stimulating forums, networking and sharing with new friends and old colleagues from a wide variety of disciplines. Visit the exhibits, bookstore and participate in events to spread media literacy in the US. The 2007 NMEC is four days of non-stop media literacy!

Early Bird registration before May 1 is only $295.

Double hotel room is $80.

It only happens every two years!

So meet you in St. Louis in 2007! Conference information will be posted and updated regularly on the AMLA web site, including the RFP process and schedule of speakers and events.
